

To Whom It May Concern:

It is with great pleasure to write this letter on behalf of Liam Sallee. I have known Liam for the past six years through the St. Louis Gamers baseball organization and have been his hitting coach during this time.

Liam is an outstanding student and also a team leader on and off the field. His hard work and dedication has built him into a quality baseball player, respected not only by myself, but his teammates.

The St. Louis Gamers baseball program places a lot of demands on their players on the field and off. Academics and community service are held in high regard with our players and Liam meets those demands. He is able to juggle a heavy course load at school (taking honors courses), has served as a member of student council, volunteers his time at Cardinals Care camps and the Animal Protective Association, and practices during the off-season with his baseball team. Many students with this type of schedule would feel the need to have to “give something up,” but not Liam, he manages his time well, and because of this he is a highly successful student and athlete.

Liam is a strong, all around baseball player with a solid understanding of the game. He is an above average infielder, who has a strong arm with excellent lateral movement. He has above average bat speed and power, especially opposite field. He is a middle of the line up hitter and maintains a high batting average. As he continues to develop, he has the potential to be a five-tool player. Liam has been one of the most consistent and dominant hitters that I have worked with over the past 10 years

Sincerely,

Dave Pregon
